PARTNERSHIP PROMOTES MORE ALCOHOL-FREE ALTERNATIVES IN CARDIFF

<< BACK

POSTED ON 15TH OCTOBER 2024

NEWSME

It's encouraging to see more young adults feeling better able to make a choice about their consumption of alcohol that feels right for them.

"This launch is the first of many engagements we will hold to gain a better understanding of what demand is out there for the nighttime economy so we can support businesses with an informed approach to meeting the demands of the market.

"Cardiff already has excellent options for spending time out and about without drinking, including experience-led activities such as escape rooms or gaming cafes and our vibrant cinema, theatre and arts scene.

"Drinking nightlife is always going to be a major part of the city centre economy but it's important that we continue to build on the variety the city has to offer in its evening hospitality."

Lauren Idowu, Principal Public Health Practitioner at Cardiff and Vale University Health Board, said:

"Global evidence indicates that two major causes of alcohol related harm are the affordability and availability of alcohol; put simply, the more available alcohol is, and the cheaper it is, the more harm it is likely to cause the population in both the short and longer term.

"Increasing alcohol-free options is an effective way of shifting the availability of alcohol. We also know there is a growing trend in sales of alcohol-free alternatives, and demand for alcohol-free events is rising.

"We need to increase the opportunities for alcohol-free nights and support the normalisation of socialising without drinking alcohol. Nights like this are great to support that shift in social norms to protect our young people from the harm from alcohol."
