About the project

Harnessing the expertise, experience and energy of pioneers in the field, we have created a user-friendly toolkit, and extensive free-access knowledge hub of Collegiate Recovery best practices.

Built on decades of experience, research, and work that supports tens of thousands of students in recovery, globally, this first of its kind platform in the UK brings the opportunity of recovery at university to students at any Higher Education Institution.

Supporting the project

CRUK was created with funding from the SSA, and project managed by leads from Recovery Connections, the University of Birmingham, and Texas Tech University.

With thanks to our steering groups of academics and students from around the world, whose contributions made the project possible.
